

The Moral Compass- Responsibility

What are some responsibilities in your life that you feel like you have to do? What's in it for you to choose to do them?

Do you know anyone who takes on too much responsibility, either harming themselves or overstepping onto someone else's independence?

Is there an issue today where people have absolute stances about what should/shouldn't be done? If you reframed the conversation instead to "when and under what circumstances," how would it change the debate?
